This Week's Parashah

In today's Torah reading, God is hesitant to go with the children of Israel into the promised land because they are a stiff-necked people. Moses speaks with God directly and convinces God to forgive the sins of the people and accompany them on their journey. A new set of the ten commandments are made, as God passes before Moses in very anthropomorphic terms, covering Moshe's eyes with God's hand, so that Moses doesn't see God's face. God makes a covenant with the children of Israel, outlining rules against idolatry and intermarriage, and instructions for observing Pesach, offering sacrifices, observing Shavuot, observing pilgrimage festivals and finally the commandment not to boil a kid in its mother's milk.

Today's Haftarah

There is a fascinating discussion in the Talmud (Sanhedrin 92b) about Ezekiel's vision - was he describing something he actually saw or was it a vision, to be explained metaphorically? There are rabbis in the Talmud who support both positions. What is clear is that Ezekiel, who lived in Jerusalem before the destruction of the First Temple in 586 BCE and was taken to Babylonia, was trying to give faith to the exiled community that just as God revived the dried bones here, so the Jewish people would be revived and returned to Jerusalem. If he is speaking metaphorically, predicting some future redemption for the Jewish people deep in distress, the relation to Pesach can be found in an old tradition that techiyat ha'metim, the resurrection of the dead, will be on Chol HaMo-ed Pesach.
